Tackling health issues around the world stands at the forefront of current global health efforts today. At Emory University, the Emory Global Health Institute (EGHI) works to improve health globally by providing support for Emory faculty and students involved in a variety of global health research, scholarship, service, and training activities. EGHI's founder, Dr. Jeffrey P. Koplan, feels that EGHI has had a positive impact on global health efforts over the last decade, and looks forward to continuing to see improvements in health outcomes around the world.

Global Health Student Photography Contest

EGHI's Global Health Student Photography Contest fosters cultural sensitivity by encouraging Emory students conducting global health projects to examine the culture and people with whom they are working. In addition to capturing both a global health message and creating a photographic work of art, EGHI also asks Emory students to consider ethical issues when taking pictures of people in low- and middle-income countries.

For the 2017 contest, photographs must be taken between 9/1/16 and 9/1/17.

The submission deadline for the 2017 contest is Friday, September 22, 2017.
